MEDICAL TUITION.

The subscribers have recently made some additional arrangements for the instruction of medical students. A suitable room is provided, as heretofore, for the use of the pupils; the necessary books are supplied, and a systematic course of study is recommended. Personal instruction is given to each pupil in each of the several departments of medical knowledge. Every facility is provided for the cultivation of practical anatomy, which the present improved state of the law permits. This department will receive the constant attention of one of the subscribers, who will always give such aid and instruction as the pupils may need.

The pupils have free admission to the lectures on Anatomy, and on Surgery, in the Medical School of Harvard University, and to all the practice of the Massachusetts General Hospital; and generally they have opportunity to attend private surgical operations.

The terms are, 100 dollars per annum; to be paid in advance.
