

Memo from
JOSHUA LEDERBERG

To: Dan Pease

JUL 29 1977

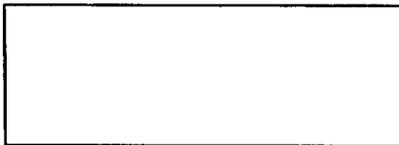

Beadle/ Tatum chronology

Thank you for the suggestions; Berg did not take the course in question, but had a couple of other leads.

Your observations about Beadle's absences are amusing. They may account for why he did not 'discover' Garrod, by his own account, until 1945 for Tatum lectured about alcaptonuria in the course in 1941 that Beadle mentions. (I have been lucky enough to locate Carlton Schwerdt as a student of the course, and HE STILL HAD HIS LECTURE NOTES!)

Officially, Beadle had been at CalTech from 1931-1936, at Harvard 36-37, then Stanford 37-46. But he must have been finishing up his book with Sturtevant 37-39; there are no other publications that would account for a strong CalTech connection through that time. I am sure he spent a lot of time abroad lecturing and fundraising.

Sincerely,

PROFESSOR JOSHUA LEDERBERG
Department of Genetics
School of Medicine
Stanford University
Stanford, California 94305