I just talked to Adrian Sob. When he arrived, Neurospora work was already in progress, but Drosophila was still in evidence -- stock kept.

He suggests that Clancy might have the key information, since he worked on the kynurenine Drosophila project but not on Neurospora, and would have seen the beginnings of the transition.

D.G. Catchside was in Jordan Hall basement during the war, and would have heard Beadle reminisce at that time. O. Kirkhart and Ofiese were here, I think, at the critical time.
