"On Technopathy"

This is the paper Mike must have had in mind. It is a rough first trial; I have to polish it for some lectures at Seattle in April.

7 February 1973

Stephen Toulmin has also written on the history of anti-scientism, in the CIBA Symposium on Science vs. Civilization?, and in an address to AAAS last Christmas. (But see Taviss, in "Technology and Culture", last issue about the statistics of popular perceptions. Also ask G Holton, Physics, Harvard, about their general program on these perceptions.) Roszak and Mumford are the most articulate contemporary romantics. There are hundreds of other works. See bibliography, Science For Society, of AAAS 3d edn. (Johnny Moore edited the first 2); a little older, Caldwell, L.K. (ed.) Science, Technology and Public Policy, Indiana Univ. Dept. of Govt. -- comprehensive and annotated.

Director General for Science nk I told you, I have been eparation of a book, which will rcial publishers, and I am cover, by airmail.

George Brosseau at NSF can put you in touch with rather a lot more, ing a lot about problems ence, technology and society, recent writings on the subject.

that you had surveyed the times cience" movements. Also, any that you can send me would be a lot myself and have collected hope to be able to come and manuscript is finished, that is,

I have a very large, mostly undigested file of my own; you are welcome to scan it, when (as I infer) you may be here after March. I look forward to that, and to discuss with you the possibility of your spending some time at the Center.

co-operation.
etings to Luca and all other

Yours,
