

Memo/Reply From
JOSHUA LEDERBERG

TO: Prof. Helen Howard

OCT - 6 1985

University - Communications - Library

Thank you for the reprint. I learned for example that my neighbor (and alma-mater) Columbia had modernized its organization!

The R.U. has approached some of these problems still more radically, by remaining modestly small and strongly focused in its mission. So our experience may not be too helpful for a more complex university. Enclosed are some materials pertinent.

One virtue of our organization is that I can try to function personally as a prime nexus of substantive communications. Not only does Mrs. Mirsky report directly to me: she will probably affirm that I am perhaps the library's most diligent user (after her!)

CC: Mrs Mirsky
(Univ. Librarian)

Joshua Lederberg
President
The Rockefeller University
New York, N.Y. 10021
(212) 360-1234

ORIG.
 COPY

RETAINED

- REPLY FORM -

Memo/Reply From
JOSHUA LEDERBERG

TO:

Do let us know if you find yourself free in NYC with a free hour or two and we can arrange a meeting with a few of our most pertinent colleagues.

You make an excellent point on the non-useful economics of the traditional library having become an impediment to investment and innovation. In designing our service, I have felt that everyone be given start-up scrips; but heavy users of any service should be charged. The greatest incentive comes from tradition-bound users!

Your paper reminds me that not only the structure of R.U. but my personal interest in communication may be atypical. But it's not a coincidence that I should be here.

See: Encls - p 253
consortium
(1987) 7-cc/34
(KR)

Joshua Lederberg
President
The Rockefeller University
New York, N.Y. 10021
(212) 360-1234

ORIG.
 COPY

RETAINED

- REPLY FORM -