Dear Arthur:

Joshua Lederberg has just been here and apparently things look good for bringing him out, provided adequate temporary space can be arranged. A considerable amount of space will be available in our basement quarters after we move, but while this will satisfactorily accommodate some of his people (e.g. Crow's group), Joshua feels that he himself, with about 12 people, must be housed in the new buildings. He asked me about lab and office space in Pharmacology and Biochemistry.

Looking over our blueprints, I find that by some crowding together, and limiting the number of graduate students we accept, I could make two laboratories (22 x 22 each) available, toward the Biochem end of our floor-plan. These rooms are designated J3-351 and J3-331. They are designed to accommodate 3-4 people each. In addition, his group would be welcome to share our common facilities. This is absolutely all the space we could possibly spare. Your total space is greater and I hope you would find it possible to provide the difference between what I can give and what he needs. In sq. ft. he puts his requirements at about 2000 - in other words you would have to spare an approximately equal amount of lab space, plus sufficient office space for his needs.

Best regards,

Avram Goldstein, M.D.
