

THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN
Department of Medical Genetics
185 Medical Sciences Building
MADISON 6, WIS.

July 25, 1960

Dr. Joshua Lederberg
Department of Genetics
Stanford University Medical School
Palo Alto, California

Dear Josh:

I think I would be interested in obtaining a copy of Garrod's classical book if it is not outlandishly expensive. Let me know some time what the cost would be.

Are you going to accept Hardin Jones' invitation to attend the Conference on Aging? I would enjoy going, except for two reasons. One is that I don't know anything about aging and have practically nothing to contribute to such a conference. The second is that I have gotten involved with quite a number of other activities and have been trying to cut down rather than add. However, if you and a few other people of interest were planning to attend, I might take a different view of this, for I would like an opportunity to participate in a conference at which you and such people as Kim Atwood would be present. Let me know some time what your plans are.

Things are moving along fairly smoothly here. The biggest difficulties are purely physical. We still haven't got the building entirely finished, though most of it is, and we are now moved into it for the most part.

I just read your Nobel paper for the second time and enjoyed it even more than the first. My earlier comment about the word ingenuous was based on a difference between the Science article and the Nobel Prize article. I know which one you meant.

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

Jim
James F. Crow

JFC/ew

Answered personally 8-17. No cc jh

*Perhaps original edition?
1908?*

*✓
no.*