Dear Professor Lederberg:

On 15 May 1957, with the help of Professors Barry Commoner and Edward U. Condon (no organization was involved), I wrote an appeal to the governments and people of the world to reach an international agreement to stop the testing of nuclear bombs, as a first step toward a more general disarmament and the ultimate effective abolition of nuclear weapons, decreasing the possibility of a great nuclear war. Within a short time this appeal had been signed by more than 2000 American scientists.

The problem of averting the impending catastrophe of a nuclear world war still exists. I feel that scientists must continue to do their part in the search for a solution to this problem.

Now I am hoping to obtain more signatures, especially those of leading scientists who did not have an opportunity to sign during the short period in May when the first effort was made.

A copy of the appeal is enclosed. I hope that you will sign it and return it to me before 1 December, or send me a letter or card saying that you sign the appeal.

I propose at some later time, probably before Christmas, to send a statement about the appeal and its support by scientists to the United Nations and to the leaders of nations, and to make a public announcement about it, with the expectation that this action will help to encourage the world toward finding ways of solving world problems other than by war and the threat of war.

Sincerely yours,

Linus Pauling:RJH
