

June 27, 1918.

Dear Margaret:

This morning I mailed you a much worn letter which had been in my pocket in rainy weather for over twenty-four hours. I did not burden you with another letter last evening. Two of my acclaws in one mail might be too much for a lovely lady with a sick child on her hands. A shortage of postage stamps was responsible for the delay. I bought three books of stamps this morning so as not to be caught that way again.

Yesterday I saw the General, + General Hucheson — and he issued an order announcing that I had been attached to his staff and that all non-military organizations having dealings with the military organizations at the port of embarkation should deal ~~through him~~ with me. Twenty six organizations or groups of organizations were listed in the document, including the Red Cross and the U.S. P. W. Service. For two and a half days I have been spending much time walking the streets hunting for an uptown suite of offices. One building we thought of ~~was~~ renting and fixing up will be torn down, and so is out of question. This little town is worse than Washington as far as overwhelming property is concerned. Finally we reserved some rooms held by ~~the~~ ~~Naval~~ Admiral Jones. They will probably be vacated and turned over in the middle of July. In the meanwhile I shall have a desk in Col. Syrett's inner office. I have asked ~~for~~ Maj. Snow to pay for the rooms, buy me an auto, and furnish an expert stenographer out of demonstration funds. I shall use four rooms - One for myself + stenog. One for St. Smith + Lt. Turner, and the special police assigned them. One for ~~the~~ their stenographer, ~~and~~ ~~one~~ and waiting room, and one for the protective officer. A special investigator with experience in N. Y. City arrived to-day to be appointed on the local police force. There will be something doing here soon. Fortunately the town is fairly dry. But it is highly amorous. Some of the hotels have very bad names and the local police have been totally inadequate.

I am writing this before supper so as to be sure that it gets written. I am to meet the police board at 7.30 and go to Hampton to a reception at the house of a prominent citizen ~~at~~ after the meeting. The prospect seems bright. I feel that the days of greatest trial are the house and office hunting days. After establishing a castle, or "base-camp," or whatever you may call it - the rest becomes relatively easy & pleasant. I wish I could establish a temporary home, but that can only be done by transporting the sweetest woman in the world, and she is now busy with little Gertrude. I am hoping that a letter will soon arrive and tell me the news about the sick one. I have had no word since the first letter.

The weather has been delightfully cool, but sometimes rainy in Washington & here, since I came down from Mich. It seems to be giving the lie to the horrible accounts of the heat, but the experience in May makes me expect some real hot weather in July & August.

I couldn't finish this letter last evening before the meetings. Everything went fine.

The police commission appointed five extra men and the Sanitary Corps will furnish five. That ought to be a plenty. The first action will be pulled off to-night, just to wake the town up a little and make vice pull in its horns and crawl out of sight.

After the police meeting I went with St. Smith to Hampton to a reception at the home of Mrs. Darling, the oyster man.

It has a large stone house and large grounds. Fireflies were in evidence, adding to the charm of the evening. A Capt. Campbell (British) was giving a demonstration of gas masks and a talk about gas warfare. He said that in some of the trenches the men had to wear masks all the time & come out of the trenches at the end of six hours to eat.

Col. Lynch was telling about a Colonel who had just come back from Montdidier section where he had been in action. They asked him whether he had had a pretty warm time of it and he said "no". Then they said it was understood that Montdidier was ~~was~~ one of the places of hottest fighting & he said he thought it was exaggerated. They said what was exaggerated & he said "The ~~war~~ war". Evidently the bombardments and real fights were not enough excitement for that old war-horse to make up for the long waits in the trenches.

Dear Margaret, guess whom I ran across to-day. Dr. Lela Beebe has been here for months under the U.S. P. H. Service doing school inspection + communicable disease work. I ran across her in the U.S. P. H. Service Office today. So there is one more Californian on the list of local lights.

Really, I think the work here is going to be very interesting. I am enclosing a copy of General Archers's order.

Please let me know how Gertrude
is. I have not heard for many days.
Write to ~~Col. Charles Lynch~~ Surgeon, Post of.
Embarcation, Newport News, Va.
I hope she is well on the way to recovery.
Lots of love from Wilbur.
