HISTORICAL SKETCH.

THE HISTORY of this Society may be written in few words: At one of a series of social gatherings of the profession, at the house of Dr. Edward Delafield, in the winter and spring of 1842, the idea of founding a society for the aid of the destitute widows and orphans of medical men, which had for some time been a favorite notion with the host, was formally suggested to his guests, and by them cordially received. The subject was fully discussed, and a committee was appointed to bring it to the notice of the profession. This was on the 30th of March, 1842.

The committee, which consisted of Drs. Delafield, Thos. Cock, J. Kearney Rodgers, F. U. Johnston, and H. D. Bulkley, addressed a circular to the profession, and called a meeting, which was held on the 12th of May, in the Library of the Lyceum of Natural History. At this meeting a plan or provisional basis of organization was presented by Dr. Delafield, and adopted; but this was shortly after superseded by a more elaborate code of laws, which was established (after discussion) at the meeting of November 26, 1842.

Somewhat more than one hundred signatures were obtained; but of the signers, nearly one half failed to complete their membership; so that, at the close of the year 1843, when the first additions were made by election, the total number of members was only sixty. No new members were chosen in 1844, though in September of that year a circular was addressed to every regular member of the profession in the city and vicinity, calling attention to the objects of the Society, and soliciting co-operation. Only four new members were obtained in 1845, and the same number in 1846; while the deaths and withdrawals were about as numerous. In 1848 the membership numbered only eighty, and it scarcely rose above this figure for eight years more, at the end of which period it numbered ninety. After 1858 the number ranged between one hundred and one hundred and ten, till 1867, when, at the close of a quarter of a century, the Society only numbered one hundred and one. At the anniversary dinner of that year, however, a good deal of interest was manifested, which resulted in a considerable increase of members; and, at the present date, the roll of members amounts to one hundred and twenty-five. Of these, one hundred and three are members for life.

Up to this time the entire number of those who have ever belonged to the Society is two hundred and twenty-four.

The Society has received but little aid from any but its actual members. The first contribution to its funds from a layman was from Augustus Henry Ward, Esq., who made himself a benefactor in 1851. Mr. Ward continued to take an interest in the Society up to the time of his death, having on several occasions made donations, and given the requisite sums to constitute new life members, and in his will leaving it a legacy of three thousand dollars. Only four other laymen have thus far constituted themselves benefactors, viz.: A. Macdonald, Esq. ; Edward B. Little, Esq. ; John Alstyne, Esq. ; and Eleazar Parmelee, Esq.

Mr. Ward's legacy, and one of one thousand dollars from Miss Catherine Eckert, are the only legacies the Society has yet received from persons outside of the medical profession ; and, with the handsome bequest of ten thousand dollars from Dr. Jacob Harsen (who, though he had never practised medicine, always kept up his interest in the profession, and at the time of his death was Vice-President of the Society), and the legacy of three hundred dollars from Dr. John A. Swett, to make three life members, constitute the only bequests the Society has received from any source.

The handsome donations of one thousand dollars from Dr. Delafield, and of three hundred dollars from Dr. A. Dubois, deserve to be recorded. Dr. Dubois has further contributed to the funds of the Society the sum of seven hundred dollars, to constitute seven new life members.

Since the year 1852, when the first application was received for relief, the Society has constantly afforded its aid to several of the families of its deceased members ; and, as its funds increased, has enlarged the sphere of its beneficence and increased the amounts of its allowances. If we may trust the uniform and grateful testimony of the annuitants, these payments have effected an immense amount of good.

Some facts connected with these appropriations are sufficiently interesting to be mentioned here. In one case, the family of a member, the whole amount of whose contributions to the funds of the Society was forty dollars, received in benefits during a series of years fully two thousand five hundred dollars. This helped to sustain them in a respectable position, until the children were all settled in life. In another instance, a member had died leaving his widow a handsome competence. But about ten years after his death, owing to unfortunate investments, her property had all been lost ; and she claimed and received aid from the Society, and still derives a considerable sum annually from its funds.

The Society is thus quietly fulfilling the beneficent purposes of its founders. Its funds have been husbanded with careful economy, until their gradual accumulation is sufficient to insure its continued existence. The expense of its management is insignificant. As it grows older, like all other similar institutions, it may be expected that it will have larger demands upon its funds, as every year will probably increase the number of those who become members with a view to its prospective benefits. In view, therefore, of what it has already accomplished, and of what it will doubtless perform in the future, the Medical Profession of New York may well cherish this Society as an object of pride and affection.
