

The Evening Post: New York, Monday, November 10, 1851

Obituary

Our City sustained a severe loss yesterday in the death of two of her most active and useful citizens, Dr. J. Kearny Rodgers and Gardiner G. Howland.

Dr. Rodgers had been seriously ill for some time with a typhoid fever, which terminated fatally at three o'clock yesterday morning. The deceased has occupied a prominent rank in his profession for many years in this city, and at the time of his decease - in the fifty-eighth year of his age - was just reaching the meridian of his professional fame. He was one of the attending surgeons of the New York Hospital, one of the Trustees of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, one of the consulting surgeons of the Northern Dispensary, and a surgical director of the Eye and Ear Infirmary in Mercer street. His death has created a vacancy in the medical profession which few are competent to fill, and will be deplored by an unusually large circle of kindred and friends. The funeral services are appointed to take place at the First Presbyterian Church, Fifth avenue, to-morrow afternoon, at four o'clock precisely.

New-York Daily Times, New-York, Monday, November 10, 1851

DEATH OF AN EMINENT SURGEON. - Yesterday afternoon, J. Kearny Rodgers, M. D., one of the most skilful Surgeons in the United States, suddenly died, at his late residence in Bleeker-street.